BoG unveils plan to turn remittances into Ghana's next investment engine.

Bank of Ghana Governor Johnson Pandit Asiamah has announced plans to transform remittances into a major source of investment capital for Ghana. Speaking at the "Remit2Invest" diaspora roundtable in the U.S., he emphasized shifting remittances from consumption toward structured investments to support long-term economic growth. Remittance inflows reached about $7.8 billion in 2025, surpassing foreign direct investment, highlighting their importance to Ghana's economy. To maximize impact, the central bank is promoting formal channels, digital payment systems, fintech partnerships, and new instruments like diaspora bonds. The initiative aims to position the diaspora as key investors in sectors such as SMEs, infrastructure, and real estate, while supporting economic stability and growth.
